

I find this to be another outrageous example of giant corporations flaunting their power and control over the federal government. The FCC is required to take action against this company. The only question would be just how partisan the FCC might be. Most of us would like to think that we are still citizens of a democratic republic, not a dictatorship. The effectiveness of federal regulation, despite the party that is in power, is the measure of our republic. I'm moving from skeptical to cynical watching the antics of our federal regulators. I hope the FCC hasn't joined the "EPA" and others in this partisan battle.
